In a series of studies, the Ready4K approach has been shown to increase parental involvement at home and school, leading to 2-3 months of literacy gains.* Available in Spanish, Chinese, Arabic, and Vietnamese (with select grades in Somali and Hmong), Ready4K can help promote English language proficiency for students spanning multiple cultures.	Ready4K activities build on existing family routines, like pointing out letters on a shampoo bottle during bath time, making parent and family participation fast, fun, and easy. For additional support, Ready4K can link families to resources in the community. Multiple studies have shown that the Ready4K approach increases parent engagement at home and school.*	Strengthening parent, family, and community engagement is what Ready4K is all about. In an ongoing national longitudinal family engagement survey that spans multiple years and includes 66,132 responses and counting, 97% of parents and caregivers surveyed said that Ready4K strengthened their relationship with their child (n=3,908).	We continuously measure how often parents and caregivers do Ready4K activities with their children, and we ask open-ended survey questions to make sure that Ready4K messages are just right. Across 10,198 parents and caregivers surveyed, 94% say that they do Ready4K activities at least once per week with their child, and 98% say they helped their child grow (n=3,443).	Hosted once per month, each live, one-hour virtual Ready4K Family Workshop brings Ready4K’s evidence-based family engagement curriculum to life through modeled moments, interactive games, songs, stories, and puppet shows. And these joyful, play-and-learn-style virtual workshops work, with 96% of parents saying they were helpful or very helpful.
